

INTRODUCTION

The Critical Care Unit can be viewed as one of the most stressful areas in hospitals for patients and family members, causing them great anxieties. It can be very challenging for nurses who have never worked in an ICU previously as demands from medical personnel, patients and patients' family members are extremely high. The nurses have to learn and to manage the various machinery and electronic gadgets used for patients. This alone is stressful and daunting for uninitiated nurses. Furthermore, caring for severely ill patients is also time-consuming and requires patience.

Nurses provide and contribute to the care of critically ill patients in a variety of roles. The most prominent role for the professional registered nurse (RN) is that of direct care provider. Other nurse clinicians also contribute to patient care, including patient educators, cardiac rehabilitation specialists, physician's office nurses, and infection control specialists. The specific types of expanded-role nursing positions are determined by individual organizational resources and needs.

Critical care nurses to keep pace with the latest information and develop skill to manage new treatment and technologies. As issues related to patient care become increasingly complex and new technologies are introduced every year, critical care nurses need to become ever more knowledgeable.
